

RELOCATION

It is now commonplace for jobseekers to look for roles based in locations across the UK. Workers are now more migratory, and are willing to move to a new city to pursue the right job. The idea of starting a new job in a new location might seem like an exciting prospect, but would you be prepared to go for it?

- How much will it cost to move? Investigate the cost of moving home at www.your-move.co.uk
- Can you afford to live there? Wages may be higher in cities such as London, but so is the cost of living.
- Will you enjoy the lifestyle and culture? Each city has its own way of life. Time Out's web site has city guides to Edinburgh, London, Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, and Bristol.
- Can you afford to move back home if it doesn't work out? Consider the financial and career implications of going back on your decision to relocate.
- What will be the impact on your family? Are you happy with local schools and amenities? What's it like socially? As an employee you will have a ready-made network of colleagues, but what about your partner who may feel isolated and lonely?

USEFUL LINKS

To find out property prices, nearby schools, local services and other details see www.upmystreet.co.uk This web site can help you with the moving process, from organising a mortgage to finding a property and a solicitor.

CAN I EXPECT FINANCIAL HELP?

A prospective employer might pay a lump sum towards moving costs and help with estate agency fees, to help you relocate to join them.
